Practice

Tim Hackett is a barrister with deep experience in complex litigation, class actions and high-profile commissions of inquiry. He is an acknowledged expert in all facets of health law and bushfire litigation. He has acted and appeared in leading cases in varied areas of law.

Tim is known for his forensic, collaborative and direct approach. His aptitude as an advocate exceeds his seniority at the bar. He regularly appears unled against senior counsel on hearings, applications and commissions of inquiry. He is a clear thinker and communicator, attuned to the pragmatic aspects of disputes, while fiercely advocating his client's position. Tim also readily identifies those cases in which discretion may be the better part of valour.

As a principal, Tim has led large-scale litigation teams, including successfully defending to judgment the first Australian case on the duty of care of fire authorities and land managers in response to a naturally-caused bushfire.

Tim appears both for government and corporate clients with reputational risk and commercial relationships, as well as for clients without a voice and for whom access to justice or cultural sensitivities may be a challenge. He actively listens to all stakeholders and champions respectful dealings with all comers.

Tim's sought-after advice led to his appointment to ministerial and corporate committees, and as a panellist at international conferences. He has been involved in shaping policy and legislation concerning disclosure of adverse incidents and statutory privilege for incident investigations in NSW Health.

Tim also has significant experience as a facilitator of expert conclaves in complex litigation. He appears in pro bono matters by arrangement and is a contributor to The Australian Pro Bono Manual: A practice guide and resource for law firms Outside chambers, Tim is a music obsessive and amateur DJ. Some of his sporting therapies include running and playing football with Sacred Heart Lions and Bar FC.
